Welcome to Platform Downtown at Boston Fashion Week 2015!

For more than 20 years Boston Fashion Week has celebrated local talent and worked hard to make the week as accessible as possible to the public. The content changes every year depending on the unique mix of creative individuals who come together to express themselves through fashion. This eagerly anticipated annual tradition has always relied on the generous support of organizations, institutions and local businesses to help make dreams come true. Last but not least, the success of every event hinges on you! You are watching the shows, shopping for clothes, and spreading the word! And there is so much to see, buy, and talk about because the week is always packed full of fun fashion events!

Platform Downtown is a special series of events that takes place throughout Boston Fashion Week. Downtown dresses up with an exciting collection of fashion shows, shopping events, parties, screenings, talks, and installations. There really is something for everyone!

The concept for Platform Downtown was conceived of by stylist and event producer Terri Mahn. Her vision embodies the spirit of Boston Fashion Week which is all about engaging the community, collaborating with other industries, and expanding the definition of a fashion week in Boston by challenging conventional thinking regarding the role it plays in our personal and professional lives.

The project has been sponsored by the Downtown Boston Business Improvement District (BID), who have proven themselves to be true leaders in our city — putting their time, resources and enthusiasm behind all this incredible programming at the heart of Boston Fashion Week.

I encourage you to seek out fashion professionals in the area, buy local, and be instrumental in helping our local fashion industry thrive. Also, don't forget to check out the rest of the official Boston Fashion Week schedule at www.bostonfashionweek.com

See you in the front row!

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 27

'Origin' A Fashion Film Short by Bearwalk

6 PM, 100 Federal St., ground level theater

'Origin' was conceived as a way to connect an entire community to the world of fashion. Fashion is what you see when you look into a mirror before a presentation at work. It is that dress you held dear in your memories.

The screening will be followed by a conversation with the filmmakers Brian Tortora and Daniela Goncalves, facilitated by Jay Calderin, founder and executive director of Boston Fashion Week.

Admission: $10.

THE SIXTH FLOOR: Official Boston Fashion Week Opening Event

7:30 – 9:30 PM, 100 Federal St., 6th Floor

The entire sixth floor at 100 Federal is an exciting and expansive raw space that will serve as a blank canvas for fashion on the official opening of Boston Fashion Week.

Hosted by Platform Downtown this event is an opportunity for you to see and be seen with designers, photographers, models and all the important fashion professionals who make fashion happen throughout the city.

Guests will also be the first to see Projected Beginnings, a multi-media installation by Bob Packert, fashion photography by Sadie Dayton, and "White Wash" a series of paintings by artist/designer Robert Merton. See more about featured artists below.

Admission: $40. Price of admission includes one cocktail and lite bites. Cash bar to follow.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

THE HAND OF FASHION: Fashion Artisans

6 PM, 100 Federal St., 6th Floor

This event will focus on the art and craftsmanship that goes into producing a fashion garment or accessory.

Admission: $20.
Cash bar.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 30

OPEN RUNWAY

12 – 2 PM, Summer St. Plaza (outside PRIMARK & Macy's)

Using the same premise as an open mic night for singers or comedians, this Open Runway will provide an opportunity for budding local fashion designers to show their creations. Fashion designers at every stage of their careers (that includes student fashion designers) are invited to participate in this open air fashion show in Downtown Crossing. Come help us cheer on all these aspiring fashion talents!

Jay Calderin, the founder and executive director of Boston Fashion Week, will serve as host of OPEN RUNWAY. He will be joined by a team of former LAUNCH designers who debuted their first collections during Boston Fashion Week 2013 and 2014: Jeffrey Dickerson - Launch Designer 2014; Chynna Pope - Launch Designer 2014; Tatiana Tejedor - Launch Designer 2013; Carlos Villamil - Launch Designer 2013. This fab four will help him celebrate all the designers who are putting their best fashion forward!

This event is free to attend and open to the general public.

SMART TALK

8 PM, 100 Federal St., 6th Floor

This Smart Talk will focus on the new frontiers designers are exploring through their work in the fashion industry. This conversation will include designers Thom Solo, Taylor Stapleton, Andrew Berul and Christian Restrepo and be moderated by Boston Fashion Week Founder—Jay Calderin. Guest will also be invited to explore a curated display of works by these designers.

Smart Talks are a part of the Boston Fashion is SMART campaign. The Boston Fashion is SMART campaign will be made up of events and initiatives that play a vital role in expanding the definition of fashion in the region. These events/initiatives will serve as bridges into other innovative industries and creative communities and have been designed to initiate exploration and collaboration in the areas of science, technology, arts, culture, and education.

Admission: $20. Cash bar.

Expert not digging North-South Sta. link

T. Engineering professor says extend the Blue Line instead.

The idea of building a tunnel under a tunnel through downtown Boston might give people flashbacks of the horrors and hassles of the Big Dig.

But experts said that tunneling under Boston to link the two major rail hubs in the North-South Station Rail Link would not disrupt life on the surface or in the Central Artery tunnels.

"The original plan for the Big Dig included this rail connector," Wentworth Institute of Technology Civil Engineering Professor James Lambrecht said. "It died out because of the cost overruns, but the tunnel was built with this link in mind."

Lambrecht said the connector link should be much lower on the list of priorities.

"I would rather see them extend the Blue Line down to Riverside through Back Bay, and getting rid of the D Line on the Green Line," Lambrecht said. "I refuse to punish myself by riding the Green Line, and if they bring in an estimated 30,000 more people once the Medford extension is complete, we're talking about taking an overcrowded line and making it much worse."

"I would rather see them extend the Blue Line down to Riverside through Back Bay."

Lambrecht

Lambrecht said that by creating a Blue Line track through Back Bay and to Riverside, a passenger could ride from Hynes to Airport station in just 12 minutes on just one train.

However, proponents of the North-South Station link project met behind closed doors on Monday to look over the benefits and costs of the project. At present, there are 140 state representatives and senators signed onto a 2012 letter of support for the 1.5-mile connector line.

Former Govs. Michael Dukakis and Bill Weld met with Gov. Charlie Baker earlier this month to sell him on the $2-$4 billion link idea.

"My main focus on this issue has been to fix the T," Baker said. "I do believe that fixing the T is my largest priority. But obviously, in this context of economic development and regional planning, not just for Boston but for the rest of the Commonwealth, this is certainly something worth considering as part of that."

Tunnel boring machines would tear 35- to 40-feet-in-diameter circular holes under the city and lay concrete in its wake at a rate of 50 to 100 feet each day, but there would be no blasting or surface-digging to disrupt traffic at all.

The connector rail line would run about 130 feet below the city surface, which Lambrecht said would be a problem because trains don't like running on steep grades. The track would have to start a mile away, Widett Circle for the South Station line and Mystic River/Sullivan Station for the North Station line, and would have to ease their way to the ultimate depth.

The tunnel would only take about a year, Lambrecht estimated. The stations might take four or five. Lambrecht said the low-ball $2 billion price tag is too low and the $8 billion estimate from the Romney administration is far too high, making the current estimate of somewhere around $4 billion possible.

"There have been some high estimations from prior administrations, which is why we need a more comprehensive study," said Rep. Sean Garballey who is also the MBTA Caucus co-chair. "We owe it to the taxpayers to have a more comprehensive study, and we owe it to the commuters to being our transit system up to 21st-century standards."

Snow. Baker, T bosses say winter work ahead of schedule

Feel that chill in the air? Before we know it, the snow will be here.

When it does, the MBTA will be ready. That was the message from state officials, who were confident at a press conference Wednesday about the coming season.

"We are far better prepared for this winter than last year," Gov. Charlie Baker said at a staging facility in Dorchester on Wednesday.

The T has been working through an $85 million package of winter-resiliency fixes spurred by last year's catastrophic mix of delays and canceled trains amid record snowfall.

Since then, MBTA crews have completed 27,000 linear feet of third-rail replacements on the Red and Orange lines, said Frank DePaola, the MBTA's interim general manager.

By mid-December, DePaola said 50,000 feet of new rails would be installed on all of the Orange Line, and the Red Line moving south to Quincy Center. The stretch between Quincy Center and Braintree stations was set to be upgraded in 2016, he said.

Also new this winter are plows that will be fitted on the front of trains, 20 each on the Red and Orange lines, designed to push snow out of the way of tracks and trains' motors.

Gov. Charlie Baker, right, joined MBTA General Manager Frank DePaola for a tour of the MBTA staging facility in Dorchester on Wednesday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

The T has also running drills based on new protocols for ultra-snowy weather, DePaola said, modeled after the way the state's Highway Division prepares for storms.

"We're preparing for a winter just like last one, and our team is being trained for that," DePaola said.

Remember, it isn't all good news. A mountain of work still needs to be done on the T to get it to a so-called "state of good repair." Updating the system to good working condition could cost north of $7 billion, the MBTA's fiscal and management control board said in its report Tuesday. SPENCER BUELL

5 years for stashing bodies in storage unit

Grief. Former undertaker gets prison after officials found 12 bodies in a storage unit in Weymouth.

A former undertaker was sentenced to five years in prison for illegally keeping dead bodies in a storage facility, ripping off seniors for thousands of dollars and giving family members the wrong cremated remains.

Joseph O'Donnell plead guilty to stealing $150,000 from clients and storing 12 bodies in a storage facility in Weymouth, among other charges on Wednesday.

O'Donnell ran his grandfather's funeral home on Neponset Avenue since 1980, but failed to renew his license in 2008.

From February 2009 to November 2011, he oversaw the funeral, burial or cremation of at least 201 individuals, according to the Suffolk County District Attorney's office.

He also entered preneeds contracts with clients, many of whom were elderly, planned and provided payments for their departed loved ones. Instead of putting those payments into a trust, O'Donnell dumped the money into the funeral home's personal account.

During the investigation, authorities got a search warrant for a storage facility in Weymouth where they found 12 decomposing bodies. Officers tracked down the relatives of 11 of the dead, eight of whom were given the cremated remains of someone else.

A big black-and-white something was taking shape high up on the side of the Hancock Tower on Wednesday. It appeared to be a standing man. It's at least four stories tall. The tower has been on an artistic streak lately. Earlier this year it was host to a colorful, block-long installation by the artist MOMO in the building's bottom floor.

New recycling kiosks debut at T station

Two big recycling bins are now in action in the busy Alewife T station, part of a pilot program the MBTA and recycling boosters hope will inspire riders to be eco-conscious on the go.

The twin kiosks are big, standing seven feet tall, and they include tips about what you can recycle (plastic bottles, newspapers) and what you can't (plastic bags, dirty things).

"Highly traveled public spaces ... are a critical part of the waste-reduction puzzle in Massachusetts," Edward Hsieh, executive director of the nonprofit MassRecycle, said in a statement. SPENCER BUELL

Hub startup competing for Super Bowl ad

Unshrinkit co-founder Nate Barbera / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Exposure.
Unshrinkit is fighting for the chance to air a commercial for millions.

Their product is simple: a bottled formula that unshrinks shrunken sweaters. Their goal is big: land an ad that airs during the Super Bowl.

Boston startup Unshrinkit, which started two years ago, is working around the clock to score points in a competition to get a slot in the most prized advertising space imaginable, squaring off against nine other small businesses in a quest for the most votes.

The contest, called Small Business Big Game, is run by Intuit, the company that makes Quickbooks accounting software. A panel of judges picked 10 businesses, including Unshrinkit, from a pool of 15,000 applicants, a spokesperson said.

A spot during the "big game" (for copyright reasons, they can't call it the Super Bowl — so they call it the "big game") would be a big deal for Unshrinkit, said Nate Barbera, chief innovation officer.

"Talk about blowing the doors off a business," Barbera said in an interview at the Seaport startup accelerator MassChallenge, where the company is headquartered.

An engineer by training, Barbera, 30, claims he came up with the Unshrinkit formula by studying wool textbooks on loan from the library then sloshing chemicals together in his Harvard dorm.

Barbera and co-founder Desiree Stolar, the company's 30-year-old CEO, teamed up to sell the product as part of a first-year course at the Harvard Business School. They both graduated in May.

Stolar said she has already dreamed up ideas for a potential commercial for football's biggest event, which more than 100 million people watched last year, and for which advertisers paid a reported $4.5 million for a 30-second spot.

Stolar said, for example, a college student comes home for the holidays wearing a shriveled-up sports team sweater, and grandma comes to the rescue with a bottle of Unshrinkit, she mused.

"I just have this vision," she said.

To make it happen, they would need tens of thousands of votes online. To get them, they said, they are on a big media and marketing push to recruit supporters.

Reality TV star, small-business owner and "Apprentice" Season 1 winner Bill Rancic, a spokesman for the competition, flew to Boston this week to meet Unshrinkit and offer some advice on besting their competitors.

Rancic, who is visiting all 10 finalists over a 10-city tour, told us he believes Unshrinkit could have what it takes if they can pull off a marketing blitz by November.

Quoted

"Talk about blowing the doors off a business."
Barbera

"They've got to mobilize. They've got to get the people within their community to rally behind them," he said. "At some point, the numbers are going to speak volumes."

Intuit would not say publicly how many votes each contender has so far, planning to keep the rankings secret throughout the competition, according to a spokesperson.

Competition organizers were set to announce the top three contenders in early November then announce a winner a few weeks later.

Last year's winner was a company called GoldieBlox, which makes toys designed to stoke an interest in engineering in young girls.

Show some love for Unshrinkit on the Small Business Big Game website. Another Massachusetts company out of Swansea — a fitness studio for children called WiggleKids Inc. — is also competing.

Four things to know

1 5.6 million fingerprints stolen in US personnel data hack

Hackers who stole security clearance data on millions of Defense Department and other U.S. government employees got away with about 5.6 million fingerprint records, some 4.5 million more than initially reported, the government said Wednesday.

During an ongoing analysis of the data breach, the estimated number of people who had fingerprint records stolen rose from 1.1 million to about 5.6 million, the Office of Personnel Management said in a statement.

OPM has estimated a total of 21.5 million people had their Social Security numbers and other sensitive information stolen in the hacking incident earlier this spring.

The discovery of additional missing fingerprints did not affect that total, it said.

U.S. officials have privately blamed the breach on Chinese government hackers, but they have avoided saying so publicly. Officials also have said no evidence has surfaced suggesting the stolen data has been abused, though they fear the theft could present counterintelligence problems. REUTERS

2 Charleston to honor shooting victims with street dedication

A South Carolina city on Wednesday is honoring the victims of a shooting massacre by renaming part of the street in front of the historic black church where they died the Mother Emanuel Way Memorial District.

Nine people were killed at Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church in Charleston when a gunman opened fire during a Bible study session.

African Methodist Episcopal bishops plan to join hands in front of the church, nicknamed Mother Emanuel, to dedicate a sign over the street the church faces for the new district. REUTERS

3 Boeing to set up China plant, sell 300 jets to firms there

Boeing has signed deals to sell 300 aircraft to three Chinese firms and set up an aircraft plant in China, becoming the first U.S. firm to clinch a business tieup in the country since Chinese President Xi Jinping began a U.S. state visit.

The deals, potentially worth tens of billions of dollars, are the largest order the aerospace firm has received from Chinese companies.

ICBC Financial Leasing Co., a unit of the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China, separately confirmed it will buy 30 of Boeing's 737-800 jets, worth $2.88 billion at list prices. REUTERS

4 Pandora says it has paid $500M in artist royalties in past year

Internet radio service Pandora Media Inc. said it paid nearly $500 million in artist royalties over the past 12 months, bringing the total to more than $1.5 billion in about 10 years.

"It took us nearly nine years to generate the first billion dollars in royalties and just over a year to increase that total by 50 percent," Chief Executive Officer Brian McAndrews said in a statement Wednesday.

Pandora gets revenue from advertising and paid subscriptions. REUTERS

Pope Francis speaks on the South Lawn of the White House. / GETTY IMAGES

Pope Francis focuses on environment, poverty and migrants

Speech on the White House South Lawn.
The pope lauded President Barack Obama's efforts to reduce air pollution.

Pope Francis on Wednesday urged the United States to help tackle climate change and touched on other divisive U.S. political issues such as immigration and economic inequality on his first visit to the world's richest nation.

In an era of renewed racial tensions in the country, the 78-year-old pope invoked America's best-known civil rights leader, the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., to make points about the environment and equality.

Speaking later to American bishops, Francis acknowledged the sexual-abuse scandal that has tainted the U.S. church for years by saying these "crimes" should "never be repeated."

As Washington streets were closed and federal workers stayed home, about 15,000 people gathered in bright sunshine on the South Lawn. They heard the pope depart from his usual practice and give a speech in English.

He again made a gesture of simplicity, pulling up in the small black Fiat he used for his arrival in the capital Tuesday.

Francis is a frequent critic of the damage caused to the world's poor and the environment by capitalism's excesses.

The pope also commented on immigration and religious freedom, both issues that are on candidates' agendas in the run up to the 2016 presidential election.

Obama, whose plans for a climate-change bill were thwarted in Congress early in his presidency, said he shared the pope's concerns about the environment. REUTERS

World's biggest carmaker. Volkswagen boss quits over diesel emissions testing scandal

Volkswagen Chief Executive Martin Winterkorn resigned Wednesday, taking responsibility for the German carmaker's rigging of U.S. emissions tests in the biggest scandal in its 78-year history.

"Volkswagen needs a fresh start — also in terms of personnel. I am clearing the way for this fresh start with my resignation," Winterkorn said following a marathon meeting with the executive committee of the VW board.

The world's biggest carmaker admitted to U.S. regulators that it programmed computers in its cars to detect when they were being tested and alter the running of their diesel engines to conceal their true emissions.

Volkswagen did not name a successor but said proposals on management appointments would be made to a full board meeting on Friday. Tagesspiegel newspaper, citing sources close to the board, said earlier that Winterkorn would be replaced by Matthias Mueller, who heads the company's Porsche sports-car business.

Mueller, a former head product strategist, is also a management board member of Porsche SE and is close to the Piech-Porsche family, which controls Volkswagen.

Winterkorn, who during his eight years in charge oversaw a doubling in Volkswagen's sales and an almost tripling in profit, said he was shocked that misconduct on such a massive scale had been possible at the company, adding that he was not aware of any wrongdoing on his own part.

The car maker was under huge pressure to take decisive action, with its shares down more than 30 percent in value since the crisis broke. REUTERS

Kendall Jenner, teen queen of dating rumors

They said what? / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

While we're waiting for Orlando Bloom to chime in on whether or not he's been playing kissy-kissy with Kendall Jenner, at least one older dude linked to Not Kylie is going on the record. "Fantastic Four" star Michael B. Jordan tells GQ, "Kendall's a friend of mine, you know? I don't know her, like, that well, but I know her enough. People's perspective on that is what it is. I don't f—ing know." So, there you have it?

Amy Poehler on the market again

But you guys seemed so cool together!

Can we blame all these celebrity breakups on the impending holiday season, or is it too soon for that? You know, like how if you're not sure about a relationship, the last thing you want to do is start worrying about Thanksgiving plans? Anyway, I'm not saying that's what's behind Amy Poehler's split from Nick Kroll after two years of dating, but it's a pretty good theory, right? Or this: "Unfortunately, they just couldn't make the relationship work with their schedules," a source tells Us Weekly. "They really tried, but it just wasn't realistic anymore. They were spending more time apart than together." Sure, but for some couples that's actually a plus.

Can J.Lo stop the release of her old home movies?

Jennifer Lopez's first husband, Ojani Noa — you probably don't remember him — has a bunch of home movies from way back when, and he and business partner Ed Meyer are eager to let them loose on the world. How rude. "We are going to produce a DVD and also have a streaming release of the J.Lo home-video footage," Meyer says, according to InTouch. "There is revealing video of her with a lack of clothing and in sexual situations, especially in the hotel footage from the honeymoon." Lopez, Noa and Meyer have been locked in a legal battle for more than six years, but Lopez withdrew all of her claims against them over the summer. "The videos contain salacious material and are going to shock her fans," Meyer adds. "We have unfinished business." He sounds charming, doesn't he?

Could it be any worse than "The Boy Next Door"?

How do we stop the 'Prometheus' sequel?

Hey guys, Ridley Scott has a new movie coming out — "The Martian" — which means he's been doing a bunch of interviews catching people up on all those sequels he's been threatening to make, like his ill-advised follow-up to "Blade Runner." Even more disconcerting? He's apparently serious about continuing the terrible "Prometheus" franchise, sending the disembodied head of Michael Fassbender back to work early next year. "Fassbender will do ['Prometheus 2'] with me, and it's meant to start production in February," Scott tells Deadline. "I'm in prep now. I'll either shoot in [Australia] or [Canada]." Could I suggest a third option, like shooting it "not at all"? That would be swell.

OH, RIDLEY.

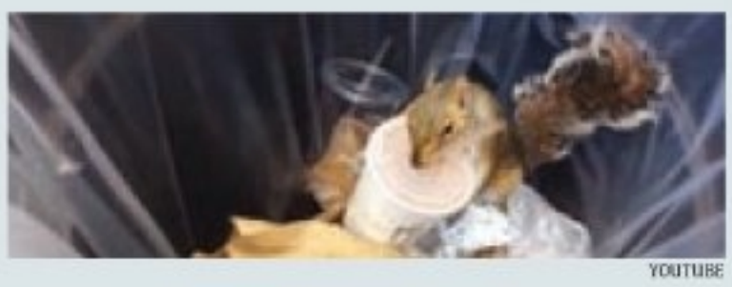
Milkshake Squirrel steals Shake Shack from NYC garbage



YOUTUBE

Move over, Pizza Rat, there's a new, more adorable food-stealing vermin on the scene. This must be the season for spotting animals making desperate bids for discarded food, because this squirrel liberating a Shake Shack milkshake from a trash can is supercute. It's clearly so into the thick, sugary bounty that it doesn't mind some up-close camera work. And it doesn't take long for the onlookers to dub him "Shake Squirrel," despite their concerns about his impending tummy ache.

Viola Davis is on top of the world

"How to Get Away With Murder" returns tonight at 10 p.m. / MITCHELL HAASETH, ABC

Interview. The "How to Get Away With Murder" star has a few things to say to people who think her character isn't likable.

Viola Davis made history in her first leading role on network television. After one season, she became the first African-American woman to win an Emmy for best actress in a drama for her portrayal of the brilliant but tortured Annalise Keating in "How to Get Away With Murder." But it hasn't all been easy. Davis says she's heard criticism that Annalise isn't likable enough, which isn't what she wants to hear.

"It frustrates me a little bit because I feel that people don't understand what it means to be an actor. I don't think James Gandolfini or Robert De Niro in 'Taxi Driver' or 'Dexter' or James Spader — I don't think they get asked that. I think that people just accept the character. They accept what they're being given, and they actually reward them because they feel like it's complicated," says Davis. "It's only women that you want to be pretty and likable."

And that thought process isn't just from random commenters on the Internet complaining.

"I remember I read a review, too, where someone wrote, 'I don't think I'll continue to watch "How to Get Away With Murder" because she's not pretty, and she's not likable,' and I thought to myself that nobody will ever address that as being their stuff," says Davis.

"They'll put it on the actor. And me as an actor, that's not my responsibility. If I make her likable, then I'm pushing an edit button, and that's not what you're supposed to do as an actor. You don't press an edit button."

But the likability problem extends beyond just asking that Annalise be more charming. People seem to really like the villainous characters that Gandolfini and other male actors have brought to life, and Davis says that affection is influenced by gender.

"They will forgive their mess. We understand that men at the end of the day are flawed. A man can have 50 affairs, but still there's something charming about him. But a woman, like in 'Fatal Attraction,' who's having sex with a married man is a bitch. There is something about women that we want to stay virtuous," she says.

Quoted

"This is the first time Davis has stayed with a character this long. Asked if she's enjoying the long-term work on Annalise, she says, "I am," before adding with a laugh, "Ask me that in another three years." Davis

Going there

Powerful TV

Davis also influences what ends up on the show — it was her idea to have Annalise take her wig off onscreen in the first season, and she hopes to see more scenes that address everyday life for people of color. "The most revolutionary things you can do are the most simple. And I think taking the wig off, having a scene with a mother talking about sexual abuse, a mother [and] a woman of color, putting me between her legs and doing my hair, all those things, no matter what people say, you've never seen it on TV. You just haven't. You haven't seen me on TV. That's what excites me, that [creator] Pete [Nowalk] is willing to go there."

Changes in Shondaland

Interview.
Ellen Pompeo says "Grey's Anatomy" is going to come back stronger than ever.

"Grey's Anatomy" returns tonight at 8 p.m. on ABC. / RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

It's not every show that can recover from the loss of one of its two romantic leads, but that's just what "Grey's Anatomy" will be trying to do this fall. While the show has been popular over the years for many reasons, a large part of its early success was certainly due to the chemistry between leads Ellen Pompeo and Patrick Dempsey. After Dempsey's beloved McDreamy was written off last season, Pompeo will now be carrying on without him, but she thinks it's good for the show to go through this transition.

"I always say this. In order for a one-hour drama to continue, there have to be big upheavals. Every time we've lost a major character — we've had such amazing characters on the show — and every time we've lost one, it's been devastating and sad, and you think, 'How can the show go on?' but that's how the writers find inspiration," explains Pompeo.

For a show that's been on the air for over a decade, that can inject some necessary new life into everyone who works on the show. "It always feels completely new, which is why it's easy to keep going," says Pompeo of the atmosphere once a cast member exits.

"Grey's Anatomy" has gone through some high-profile departures over the years, between the firing of Isaiah Washington after an on-set altercation and Katherine Heigl leaving after criticizing her character's storylines. But Pompeo has stuck by the show and creator Shonda Rhimes throughout, and when asked if she wished Dempsey had been written off in a different way, she answers, "I never question Shonda, ever. What she's doing is clearly working!"

That might mean a new romantic interest for Meredith Grey, who's scrambling in the wake of the death of the love of her life. As to the prospect of a new love, "As long as Shonda comes up with it, I'm down for whatever idea she comes up with. She always comes up with great ideas."

With that in mind, she says, "I know that the focus this year is going to be how you move on in the face of tragedy, and [Meredith's] got three kids, and I guess to dive into her kids and work is the most logical place."

LISA WEIDENFELD
@LisaWeidenfeld
lisa.weidenfeld@metro.us

One more thing

A lighter touch

After all the tragedy at the end of last season, Pompeo says this season will likely be a little less dark. "Shonda really wants this season to be a lot lighter," she explains. "We have some cute interns and some fresh blood, so I think you have to mix it up. We were dark, now we have to go light. You have to keep changing to keep the audience engaged."

A 'Loverly' new Eliza Doolittle

The Lyric Stage makes the most of its smaller stage with a big new production of "My Fair Lady."

NICK DUSSAULT
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

"My Fair Lady" is a big, old-fashioned musical that director Scott Edmiston has somehow fit perfectly into the intimate confines of the Lyric Stage.

The tale of a lowly street flower seller who becomes the subject of a bet between a pompous phonetics professor and a famous linguist is based on George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion." The 1956 musical adaptation, one of Broadway's biggest hits, boasts a score with some of the most famous songs in musical theater history.

It would be easy to let the score do all the work, but Edmiston smartly puts the focus on the characters, and the story becomes more than just a vehicle to get from one well-known song to the next. It also helps that Janie E. Howland's minimal set facilitates ease of movement and avoids the potential for clunky transitions.

At its core, "My Fair Lady" is all about the blossoming of a young lady, and Jennifer Ellis proves to be just the right lady to fill the shoes of the famous Eliza Doolittle. Though "Wouldn't It Be Loverly" sounds beautiful, her eyes tell a heartbreaking story of struggle that will change the way you listen to that song.

Ellis masters both dialects and nails the humor in her character's transition, but there's a wow moment when she enters the ball, followed by a stunning rendition of "I Could Have Danced All Night" that will bring chills to anyone with a pulse.

Christopher Chew masters the rigid and self-centered Henry Higgins and Remo Airaldi delivers a charming turn as Colonel Pickering.

Jared Troilo makes you forget the first act is a little long when he closes it with a rendition of "On the Street Where You Live" that'll make you think the "loverly" "Lady" isn't the only star of this show.

Passenger: Turning heartbreak into hits

Singer-songwriter Mike Rosenberg, the man behind Passenger, opens up about almost giving up music (twice!) and why he'll never stop singing about his pain.

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
emily.laurence@metro.us

Considering Passenger's single "Let Her Go" spent a massive 45 weeks at No. 1 in the U.K. and 28 weeks (and counting) on Billboard's Hot 100 charts here in the U.S., it's hard to believe Mike Rosenberg (the man behind the moniker) was considering giving up music altogether not that long ago. Here, in an emotional interview, he talks about what kept him going when he hit rock bottom.

Going solo

Passenger may be a one-man show now, but originally, it was a full band. When the band broke up in 2009, going solo didn't even occur to Rosenberg. But he booked some solo gigs anyway while visiting a friend in Australia and says the crowd connected more than ever before. "Suddenly, people could hear every word and really understand it," Rosenberg says. "It was a massive turning point."

Mike Rosenberg wrote "Let Her Go" about a painful breakup, but he says it's a joy to play the song now. SHERVIN LAINEZ

Quarterlife crisis

But that wasn't the only time Rosenberg considered giving up. While working on his second album "Whispers," released in 2014, he hit a low point. "I was 27 and had been busking and putting out my own records for four or five years and I just didn't feel like it was growing at all," he remembers. Holed up in his hotel room, Rosenberg put all his frustrations down on paper, which later became his song "27."

He says the very act of feeling his passion overflowing reignited his ambition and reminded him why he wanted to be a musician in the first place. "Obviously every [musician] dreams of playing to thousands of people and having the number one song, but that's not the reason you do it," he says. "The reason you do it is because you're trying to create something that means something to people and to yourself. It's helpful to remind yourself of that sometimes."

Taking it to the streets

Despite his massive success, Rosenberg still enjoys busking, something he started doing after the band broke up and he had no money. "Looking back on it, those were some of the best years of my life," he says. "I still love busking because not everyone can go to a concert. They might not be able to afford it or they might not be old enough. Busking allows everyone to check out what I do."

Turning pain into poetry

All of the songs Rosenberg writes are deeply personal and often painful, but he says it's a joy to share them. "When [I] write them, it can be a very painful thing because it's still fresh. But as time goes on, I still remember the girl or the situation, but it turns into something different," he says. "Especially with 'Let Her Go,' since it's known around the world now. It started off as a really heart-wrenching breakup song, but now, for me, it's such a treasured thing."

This is local punk band Chandos' last show. They released their first and now apparently only full-length album, "Rats in Your Bed," this year on Carpark Records. It's a fine collection of noisy/melodic, moody rock tracks, the band nailing the elusive sweet spot between amiable sloppiness and disciplined seriousness, and it makes us sad to see them go so soon.

Way down south in the Caribbean Sea, and with some of the best beaches in the region, Aruba is an island you don't want to miss.

ALL PHOTOS SHUTTERSTOCK

Like its neighbors, Aruba has plenty of sun, sand and sea, but that's where the similarities end. Because where other islands have lush green landscapes, Aruba is desert-like, home to cacti, arid-air-loving aloe plants and divi-divi trees.

Being so far south — a day at sea if you're cruising from Miami or Puerto Rico — it escapes the hurricane belt. Whether visiting in summer or winter, the temperature will average 82° and the humidity will be low.

Aruba is one of the Dutch ABC islands (along with neighboring Bonaire and Curacao), colonized by Holland in the 1600s and still an outpost of the Netherlands. That's how the capital, Oranjestad, got its name and came to be full of the gabled houses that are commonplace in Amsterdam. Only in Aruba, the facades are brightly colored.

Aruba's beaches are a big attraction, but step a few feet into the water and there's a world of colorful corals and fish to explore. Catamaran trips take you to the best reefs, but why not have a go on a Seabob underwater scooter that powers you through the ocean? Nonswimmers can don a diving helmet and walk underwater through shoals of tropical fish.

For those who prefer to keep their feet dry, Jeep, ATV (all-terrain vehicle) or Harley Davidson motorbike tours are a fun way to see the sights. Top stops include the California Lighthouse, a 100-year-old beacon named after the USS California, which was wrecked nearby, and the Casibari Rock Formations, a cluster of boulders where Arawak Indians, the island's first settlers, used to listen for approaching thunderstorms. Or saddle up and enjoy the arid landscapes on a horseback ride.

Oranjestad, an easy walk from the cruise port, has shopping, casinos and lively restaurants serving local specialties, including Dutch pancakes, of course.

Beaches you won't want to miss

- Arashi, at the northernmost tip of the island, is the locals' favorite. It's about 20 minutes by taxi but well worth the journey. The sand is soft, the water is calm, and the snorkeling is excellent.
- Eagle Beach, 10 minutes by taxi or bus from the port, is good for sunning and swimming. The beach also has jet skis, banana boats and tennis.
- Palm Beach, 15 minutes' drive from the port, is a favorite with families for its white sand, calm waters, easy snorkeling and a backdrop of resort hotels with bars, restaurants and shopping.

The perfect seaside town

With a quiet beach, good dining, unique shops and historical ambiance, but no crowds, congestion or commercialization, Lewes, Del., is the ideal early autumn getaway.

Ranked "the best place to live in Delaware" in a statewide poll, Lewes (pronounced LEW-is) remains a gem undiscovered by tourists. First settled by the Dutch in the 1600s, Lewes retains a sense of history. The brightly painted Zwaanendael Museum greets visitors as they arrive, and nine buildings from 1725 to 1898 stand in tree-shaded Shipcarpenter Square in the heart of town as a living museum.

The town beach, located on the Delaware Bay, is broad and clean —and beachgoers enjoy calmer waters than on Atlantic beaches. It's well-loved by families. There's no boardwalk — just a seasonal ice cream and burger stand. The biggest excitement is watching the Cape May-Lewes ferry as it docks near the beach.

Cape Henlopen State Park, just outside town, has 6 miles of Atlantic beaches, 3 miles of trails and a full menu of outdoor activities including fishing, kayaking, surfing, biking, camping and birdwatching. You can tour the remains of World War II coastal defenses at Fort Miles in the park.

The shopping and dining rival much larger resorts. Fashion-seekers should check out Aquamarine and Twila Farrell. The Steppingstone showcases American handicrafts, Packard-Reath is known for fine art photography, and Sand and Stones sells jewelry created from sand glass. Lewes Gourmet has a huge selection of British foodstuffs, while Puzzles boasts the largest selection of jigsaw puzzles in the country, plus toys that are not movie tie-ins.

Gilligans has waterfront seating. Agave is known for its Mexican fare. Striper Bites bills itself as a "nautical bistro." Irish Eye Pub is a quick visit to Dublin, while Villa Sorrento and Touch of Italy take you to the Med. Touch of Italy is also known for its cured-meat shop.

B's bit by injury bug

The Bruins will have to live without the services of veteran defenseman Dennis Seidenberg until around Thanksgiving as he will have surgery Thursday to repair a lumbar spine disc herniation. Seidenberg played the full 82 games last season but had a rough go of it two years ago when he tore his MCL and ACL.

REBOUNDING FROM ONE BLOODY SUNDAY

Week 2 was one of the worst in recent memory for injuries. There are a lot of owners out there thinking their season is over right now. That's a silly thought. The good news is that a lot of the injuries were at quarterback, which is the most replaceable position in all of fantasy.

Swim with the stream

In Week 1, Carson Palmer, Marcus Mariota, Alex Smith, Andy Dalton and Nick Foles were all top 10 quarterbacks. In Week 2, that top 10 list included Colin Kaepernick, Derek Carr, Tyrod Taylor, Palmer and Joe Flacco. The point is that we can add quarterbacks off the wire each week in plus situations and gain a top 10 expectation. That almost never happens at other positions.

Pickups of the week

Who to add for Week 3:

- James Starks, RB, Packers - The offense won't slow down at all if Eddie Lacy (ankle) misses time.
- Leonard Hankerson, WR, Falcons - Roddy White is done, and Hankerson fits Kyle Shanahan's system.

Two for one

When it comes time for the fantasy playoffs, elite players are going to make the difference. So it's never too early to take advantage of a desperate owner on the trade market. The best way to do this is to identify where our enemy is weak thanks to injury and offer him/her two of our mediocre players for one of his studs. He feels better about his depth (even though his newly acquired mediocrity won't help him win a title) and we get the difference maker we covet.

Bills quarterback Tyrod Taylor has 84 yards rushing in two games so far this season. / GETTY IMAGES

Don't panic at RB

Luckily, most of the running back injuries do not sound overly serious. Eddie Lacy (ankle), Tevin Coleman (ribs), Carlos Hyde (head) and Lamar Miller (ankle) should all be back soon. There are plenty of short-term options available at the position, including Dion Lewis, James Starks, Devonta Freeman, David Johnson, Matt Jones, Lorenzo Taliaferro, Theo Riddick and Lance Dunbar. We're looking for stopgaps that catch passes and/or have a role in the red zone. A path to 20 carries isn't always possible.

LUKE AARON Spring 2016 Collection

8 PM [doors open at 6 PM] 99 Bedford St.

Luke Aaron's Spring/Summer 2016 Collection is a voyage of discovery, inspired by artisan crafts and exotic locals around the world. Stitch-work embroidery from India and traditional Japanese cottons create an organic mix of natural color and texture. Silhouettes reflect a love of global exploration, incorporating rugged safari utility and the free-form drape of ancient tribal costume. In support of the preservation of these inspiring natural habitats, a portion of the evening's proceeds will benefit the Nature Conservancy. Doors open at 6 pm with a pre-show reception featuring a curated bazaar celebrating local and global artisans presented by Fleet Street Guild.

Admission: $35.
Cash bar and lite bites.

PLATFORM DOWNTOWN: Closing Night Party

8 – 10:30 PM, Serafina, 10 High St.

Platform Downtown was conceived as an outside the box fashion experience by local wardrobe stylist and producer Terri Mahn. "I wanted local designers and their fashions as well as photograpgers and artists to be accessible to the public with a little lift "from behind the curtain," said Mahn. Platform Downtown celebrated fashion with a film short, photography installations, meet and greet with designers, a panel discussion on new fashion directions and a few versions of runway presentations. "It was all about the collaborative spirit and could not have taken place in a more diverse location as Downtown Crossing." Celebrate the closing night of Boston Fashion Week with all of us from Platform Downtown at Serafina.

Admission: $35.
Price of admission includes one cocktail and lite bites. Cash bar to follow.

INSTALLATIONS

Sunday, September 27 - Saturday, October 3
100 Federal Street

Bob Packert - Projected Beginnings celebrates the multimedia expressions of artist Bob Packert while illuminating the relationship between two- and three-dimensional pieces.
For his gallery show at Platform Downtown at Boston Fashion Week he will be collaborating with Minneapolis-based visual artist Rachel Palmer. Palmer works in the realm of visual design and live performance. Predominantly performing at underground music events, Rachel works with artists of various mediums ranging from promotional music videos to animated photography.

Sadie Dayton - Her photos are ethereal, and yet grounded and real, and often capture the points where light and dark meet. She loves fashion, beauty, concepts of femininity and masculinity, and the sea. One of her greatest skills is her ability to make people feel at ease, and comfortable with themselves. She can make the most inexperienced subject shine and bring out sides of people they never even knew existed. Sadie's work has appeared in W, Boston, Vanity Fair, and the New York Times, while her commercial clients have ranged from medical institutions to beauty brands.

Robert Merton - Expressionistic paintings that actively engage the viewer and evoke intense emotional responses best describes Merton's recent works. His mood-shifting exhibition is a collection of abstract and gestural paintings that evolve in stages, based on Merton's responses to the canvas's progress. His overall oeuvre has an abstract and tactile appearance. His works' chalk, organic hues and thick impastos are impressionistic and calming in appearance but contain underlying undercurrents of melancholic introspection.
